BREAD SHOULD BE WRAPPED.

Master Bakers' Delegate Gives a Few Pointers on Sanitary Baking.

BALTIMORE, Sept. —"The day is not far distant when public opinion, backed by sanitary regulations, will force dealers to wrap loaves of bread as they now wrap sugar, lard, flour and other commodities," said Mr. M. L. Johnston of Detroit, a delegate to the convention of the National Association of Master Bakers, now in session here.

"The agitation for bread wrapping is not a whim, but it is a most reasonable demand, and one founded on the modern idea that cleanliness is the greatest preventive of disease. Bread should not be shoved out of a delivery wagon like coal or potatoes. Another reform which they also favor is to break up entirely the old practice of baking in basements. It is almost impossible to produce wholesome bread unless the air and ventilation are as perfect as can be."

Talking in School.

It isn't against the rules for high school students to talk while going from one class to another. Indeed, they are rather expected to do so—or to go even farther in the statement of the matter, they are encouraged to talk in those intervals of changing from room to room.

This fact surprises the freshmen—as do divers other matters discovered at high school which were unknown in the world of grades. To be not only allowed to converse during school hours, but requested—nay, even urged—to indulge in a blissful state than which the freshman, in his first halcyon days at the institution, knows nothing more delightful.

The faculty members proceed upon the theory that there is just so much talk in every student, and that about all of it has got to come out. So, they reason, if the boys and girls converse while going to recitations, they won't be so apt to whisper when they reach the room, and the recitation will therefore not be interrupted by whisperings.

"Do you take advantage of the chance to talk as you go to your classes?" was asked a freshman who was dilating on the subject.

"Yep," was the scholastic reply. "And then you keep quiet during recitation, of course?" pursued the questioner.

"Nope," said the freshman.—Springfield Republican.
